Dr. (William) & Mrs. Deadman November 5, 1956

William J. Deadman was one of Canada's first forensic pathologists. After completing his medical training, he served in WWI and thereafter become city pathologist in Hamilton, a position he held from 1919 to 1956. He was an in-demand expert witness and became known across Canada during the Evelyn Dick trail in 1946, one of the most sensationalized trials in Canadian criminal history.

He established one of the largest forensic medicine laboratories in Canada and set up a formal training program for laboratory staff, which led to the creation of the Canadian Society for Laboratory Science.

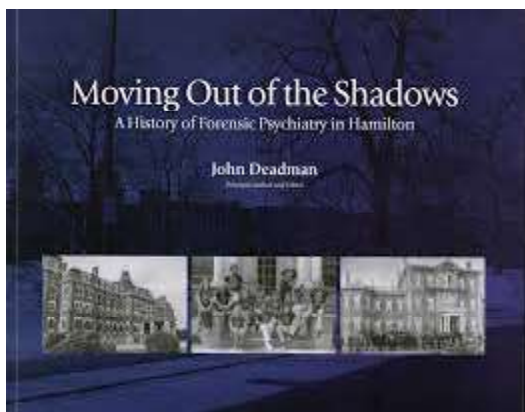

He published extensively and frequently presented at scientific meetings as well as to pathologists, coroners, and police officers. He also lectured on forensic pathology and medical jurisprudence at the University of Western Ontario (now Western University) and the University of Toronto. At the end of his distinguished career, he was the consultant in pathology to the Attorney General's Centre for Forensic Science in Toronto.

He had a keen interest in public affairs and community, and was named Citizen of the Year by the City of Hamilton in 1950. The Hamilton General Hospital's William J. Deadman Prize in Forensic Medicine was established in his honour. He also served on the University of Toronto Senate (now Governing Council), and as president of the Medical Alumni Association and UC Alumni Association.

Moving Out of the Shadows

Dr. John Deadman is the son of Dr. William Deadman. His book "tells the story of the people and institutions that have served the mentally ill who had committed crimes in the Hamilton area. And it puts this local history in perspective, telling the story of mental health care throughout the ages in the Western world, in Canada and in Ontario. It makes the case that mental health care has gone through cycles, from punitive to permissive, from the public's rights to patients' rights. In the second part of the book, the voices of the people who built Hamilton's innovative and caring forensic psychiatry program are featured. Moving Out of the Shadows is a history of an institution, and yet much more than that: it is also the history of how we care for the marginalized in our society."

ARRESTS WERE LESS IN MARCH THAN FOR MONTH OF FEBRUARY

TWENTY-SIX OF THE THIRTY-THREE PRISONERS LAST MONTH CONVICTED

BUT LITTLE BEFORE BOARD

City Council Holds Short April Session Amendment To Sidewalk Ordinance Is Tabled Salaries and Accounts Allowed by Alderman

Arrests during the month of March were less than for February, notwithstanding the fact that February was three days the shortest month. The report of the city marshal, submitted to the Board of Mayor and Aldermen at their regular April meeting Thursday night, showed that there had been thirty-three arrests during March. In February Mr. Morgan reported thirty-seven arrests. Of the thirty-three men caught by the police officers last month twenty-six were convicted. The total fines assessed against the offenders being $235.05. Mr. Morgan reported collections for March of $84.95.

The collections of Recorder Erwin during the month were 4,635.46. And amendment drawn up by City Attorney Coffey amending the sidewalk ordinance was tabled on motion of Alderman Dedman. This amendment would have given the city authority to let contracts for pavements and sidewalks, received sealed bids for the work. It was proposed by Mr. Dedman, who explained that it would tend to bring uniformity into the sidewalks. Attorney Coffey stated that the amendment would be likely to invalidate the act, certain parts of the amendment being considered unconstitutional.

On motion of Alderman Swansburg, W. O. Cherry was authorized to employ men to clean up old cemetery, which was in bad condition. Chairman Chaffin of the street committee was allowed $500 for his work. Chairman Anderson of the charity committee was allowed $25. The salaries and accounts properly O.K.'d by Chairman Swansburg of the finance committee were allowed.

The following aldermen were present: Messrs. Chaffin, Dedman, Anderson, Cherry, and Swansburg, in addition to Mayor Biddle, City Marshal Morgan, Attorney Coffey and Acting Recorder W.P. Erwin. The Board was in session only forty minutes, and adjourned until Thursday, May 4.

BICYCLES MUST BE KEPT OFF SIDEWALKS DECLARES THE MAYOR

HAS ISSUED INSTRUCTIONS TO THE POLICE TO THAT EFFECT

WILL ENFORCE THE LAW OF CITY

Walk Ways Are To Be Reserved Strictly For The Pedestrians, Says The Chief Executive; Arrests of Violators to be Made.

Mayor J.M. Dedman, in talking to a Herald man this morning in regard to the use of the sidewalks by boys on bicycles, roller skates, roller coasters, etc., stated that there had repeatedly come to him complaints from different citizens of the city against this nuisance, and that he had upon several occasions ordered the police to arrest the offenders and haul them before the city judge regardless of who they were or where caught. He stated that the police had arrested a few offenders and taken them down and turned them over to the mercies of Judge Erwin.

The Mayor said this morning that he was going to issue strict orders to the City Marshal to instruct his police not only to catch these offenders when they saw them, but that he was going to have them go out and look for them. He went so far as to state that upon the advise of any reputable citizen, that he would have the police make arrests of any offenders of the sidewalk law.

It is positively against the law of the city to use the sidewalks other than for pedestrians, and is subject to a fine, and the reckless and promiscuous use made of the sidewalks by the thoughtless, reckless boys of the town, is not only a menace to the community, but is very dangerous to those using the pavements for legitimate purposes.

Mayor Dedman was quite made up in his intentions about having this city ordinance enforced, and it would seem that, unless they change their tactics, some "Young Americans" will find themselves answering to Judge Erwin for their conduct.

SAYS MEATLESS DAY IMPRACTICAL FOR SMALLER HOTELS

J. M. DEDMAN GIVES HIS REASON FOR NOT ADOPTING PLAN AT BETHEL HOUSE

PUBLIC NOT READY FOR IT

"It is impractical for hotels in towns the size of Columbia to have meatless days," said, J. M. Dedman proprietor of the Bethel House, Tuesday night, when asked by a Herald reporter what his attitude toward the food conservation movement in this city would be. "I would like the best in the world to do anything I can to help in all the war activities," said Mr. Dedman. "but this meatless day proposition is not feasible for a hotel in a city this size. It works all right in large cities where the hotels have a market from which they can select a menu that gives many substitutes for meat."

In further explanation of his position Mr. Dedman said that before hotels can successfully inaugurate meatless and wheatless days it will be necessary to first create a sentiment for them among the traveling public. He said that he had been watching the movement with a view to adopting it but that his information from hotels in cities of Columbia's size was that it had been a failure. "As soon as the public is ready for meatless days in hotels I will adopt that plan," he said.

The food conservation committee of women have already secured an agreement from the proprietors of boarding houses in Columbia to have meatless days, and there will be a vigorous effort through educational methods to bring about a sentiment throughout this section for meatless days in all homes, hotels, boarding houses, restaurants and wherever human beings eat.

On meatless days it is permissible to eat fish, oysters, chicken, rabbits or any other kind of sea food, fowls or game.

The object of the movement is to conserve pork, beef and mutton meats that can be shipped in large quantities, for the provisioning of the soldiers of America and the allies of this country.

PARTIAL LIVER TRANSPLANT
FROM HIS BROTHER, BRAD ...

Brad was aware of the risk involved in donating part of his liver to Jason, but ... he loves his brother and if this is what it took to keep him alive it is worth the risk. I have been acquainted with their father, Glen Dedmon, for many years through the website and newsletter project, which I refer to as "The Dedmon Connection".

This is just one among many of the joys I have received since I began the newsletter and research project more than 20 years ago. It also motivates me to keep the project alive as it is no easy task to produce a monthly newsletter for so long a time. I am sure if it had not been for Hazel Inglis assuming co editorship three years ago, I would have abandoned the project.

One can only imagine the emotions of the family as the future looked bleak for Jason. Even with a transplant on the horizon, staying on top of doctor appointments and keeping himself healthy enough to get the surgery was a full-time job. He had to travel to San Francisco, CA from his home in Coarsegold (Madera County), CA several times a year for weekly appointments to treat symptoms of his liver disease. "I'm always back and forth from the hospital," Jason said. Medications kept him alive, but he was in constant pain and trouble sleeping and walking because of pain and muscle loss. If not for his brother, Brad, he would have been waiting years for a liver from a deceased donor. He said, "My quality of life was no good, I got super blessed and lucky." Glen has expressed his appreciation to all family and friends who have inquired about the health of the boys. The last message I got from him stated, "Both are doing great and back to driving and Brad is going back to his workouts".

I was not aware of the seriousness of such a donation, until I read of some who lost their lives as a result of doing that. I read of three such accounts as I was researching Jason and Brads experience... -(Leroy)

MAN IN SEARCH OF COLLEGE'S PAST

Ernest C. Hartwell, Charles McLean, Alfred C. Thompson—these are names that may or may not ring a bell in the memory of Brockport graduates.

To Wayne Dedman, however, the names and activities of these men are as fresh as yesterday. For the past 10 months, Dr. Dedman, has been delving into old records, dusty ledgers, almost forgotten file cabinets scattered throughout Western New York State in his search for more information about Brockport's past.

In addition to his position as director of curriculum development and professor of history, Dr. Dedman is also writing the College's centennial history. The history of the college is closely interwoven with that of the town, and the story really begins in 1822 when the town of Rockport enjoyed a brief period of prominence as the terminus of the Erie Canal before its extension to Buffalo.

About a decade later, in 1833, the members of the Western New York Baptist Convention began their attempts to open a Baptist College in Brockport. The Baptists did erect one building, a four story Georgian structure, and get their school going briefly before the Panic of 1837. "It was a real depression", Dr. Dedman noted. "Everybody was broke and one townsman wrote that the school building was deserted and the basement was used as a stable. I've no doubts there were bats in the belfry, too!"

In 1841, the townspeople again decided to do something about higher education. In a clever maneuver, Dr. Dedman explained, they formed a stock corporation and sold shares. With these funds, the Brockport Collegiate Institute, a non-denominational secondary school was opened in 1842 and lasted until 1866. A benchmark in the history of the Institute falls on April 2, 1854, when the original building burned to the ground.

Again, the townspeople resolved to rebuild, and sold more stock in their corporation. From this time until 1940, however, the development of the school was always tinged with financial hardship. During this period, the institute enrolled from 100 to 200 students, and the cost of room and board "plus laundry, mending, fuel, lights and tuition" was $100 to $200 for a trimester year. One name that stands out during this period of critical financing is David Burbank, who was hired as principal of the Institute and managed to collect $10,000 towards a second mortgage on the building.

Another key figure in the development of Brockport was Malcolm MacVicar, who took over as principal from Burbank in 1863. He was instrumental in convincing the state legislature to establish a normal school in the town in 1866 to train teachers for the common schools.

The legislators announced that day that they were going to open four normal schools throughout the state and invited Brockport to compete," Dr. Dedman said. As it turned out, Brockport was one of the towns chosen, and the Normal School opened there on April 17, 1867. Charles McLean succeeded MacVicar and remained as principal until 1898.

Two short administrations followed: David Eugene Smith was interim principal from 1898-1901, and Charles T. MacFaeiane, who had held the post of head of geography at Eastern Michigan accepted the post from 1901-1910. "The important event during this period", the author notes, "was the state ruling in 1904 that students must be high school graduates to be admitted to a normal school".

The real "normal school era" came late focus under Alfred C. Thompson, who was principal from 1910-1936. "By the early 1930s", Dr. Dedman said, "The state was considering discontinuing Brockport altogether and building a school for wayward girls on the site".

Onto this scene in 1936 strode Ernest C. Hartwell, whose name adorns the main administration building on the campus today. "Hartwell can really be credited with saving the school", Dr. Dedman noted. He went to Albany and fought and won the battle to get a new physical plant for Brockport. A year after he took over, he got a new four-year curriculum through Albany that changed the direction of the normal schools to 3/4 liberal arts and 1/4 professional work. That pattern has continued until recent times.

"In 1942, he was one of the leaders in the movement to transform the State Normal School into degree granting teachers colleges". Hartwell built the new building - the administration hall that stands today - in front of the old Institute. Other benchmarks in the history of the college coincide with rather recent times. In 1944, Dr. Donald M. Tower took over as president and that same year, a major in health and physical education was added. Three years later, in 1947, the school was authorized to offer graduate work through the masters degree in elementary education, and in 1948, the State University of New York was created with Brockport as one of the constituent units.

Another major change came in 1963 when Brockport began to offer a straight liberal arts course without any teacher preparation. The thinking was that there would be 300 liberal arts majors at the College. Next fall, more than 1,000 are expected to enroll in the program.
